ON BOARD THE LURLINE

(Dedicated to the good ship Lurline, the following poem, composed by Mrs.
A. B. Arleigh, who arrived with A. B.
Arleigh, was read at an entertainment on the ship on Tuesday night. It made such a hit that a copy was sent to the Matson Navigation Company, and the passengers requested the Star-Bulletin to publish it.)

Far o'er the sea
We wished to be—
In Honolulu,
Where they do the hula.

And so, you know,
They send this ship
Across the sea
For you and me.

Along the dock
I saw her lie.
Admired her length
And gauged her strength.

We came aboard
And gazed about,
Strange sights and sounds
All round about.

The roosters crow,
The young hens cackle,
The donkeys bray
By bales of hay.

A good gray horse (Man's truest friend)
Leads mules aboard—
A mighty horde.

At last the cargo's ready,
And only stay confetti!
To the shore does bind
The good ship Lurline.

At length upon the sea
We find ourselves to be,
Upon the decks we walk,
And also talk.

A farmyard greets us fore—
And also aft.
Odors of the stable,
Charming—'tis no fable.

A menagerie
And circus combination Furnishes entertainment,
Free of entailment.

The cocks they crow
Each hour of the night,
And thereby tell
The ship's all well.

A thousand hens
Their partners be,
Who roost at last
On rigging and mast.

The bantams they perch
On a big mule's back;
And the turkeys gobble
'Cause they can't hobble.

A hundred mules
He-haw! He-haw!
And twist a long ear
To amuse us here.

The Jacks still stand
By day and night,
For on the trip
They give no tip.

The great big bull,
At the end of the line,
Blear-eyed and gruff, It's not a bluff.

Short horns and flat back,
He's worth eight hundred.
His cows look mild,
For they're not riled.

Pigeons, ducks and geese
Are jealous of the hens,
Who sneak through the pantry door.

To pick up a few scraps more.
Menagerie, circus—
Well, I guess yes;
But nary a child
To enjoy it wild.

The monkeys chatter
And eat the nuts;
But where's the joy
Without a boy?

The hogs they grunt,
Their stupid stunt,
Which, wafted on the breeze,
Makes you stop and sneeze.

At dinner we sit
By a well-laden board;
Food fit for a king
Before us they swing.

But through windows we see Mules' ears and mules' ears;
Fried, baked, fricassee Odors of hay seed.

Memories of childhood!
How we forget!
A boy friend of mine
Ran away one time.

We went off to sea
In a cattle boat.
Was it like this!
Oh! Welcome bliss!

They always say,
In jest and play,
The cook's nose is longest,
But here mule is strongest.

They also say,
If you want good luck,
Don't let black cats
Cross your path—but rats.

There's a gray cat, too,
And a yaller dog
That's bob-tailed,
Mangy and hob-nailed.

Oh! ye inhabitants
Of Honolulu,
San Francisco
And Nabalco!

If you wish to ride
On a mule bareback,
And travel the seas
With barnyard fleas,

I recommend
S. S. Lurline.
Its pets galore
May make some sore;

But if you're the sort
That likes real sport,

Fort St

Devonshire county, England. He was the son of the late Captain John P.
Hitchfield of the British navy. He came to this Coast first in 1882, going as far as Honolulu. From that time on his life was spent practically on the Pacific. He owned vessels trading between this port and the South Seas, especially the Caroline and Marshall groups, in recognition of the valuable data furnished by Captain Hitchfield to the Royal Geographical Society of London he was made a fellow of that institution in 1898. In his cruises among the South Sea Islands he discovered the reefs and islands known, and Hitchfield Island.

The dead man was well known in Australia, where he spent a number of years. He instituted the mail system through the new Hebrides, Ellice and Gilbert groups of islands. He returned to America again in 1903 and served as chief officer under Captain Rinder when the latter was commissioned to bring the Mongolia to this Coast from Newport News. He made several trips to and from China on that vessel, and finally retired from the life of an active navigator to establish the United States Naval School in San Francisco, of which he remained the head until his death.

He was a member of Golden Gate Lodge of Masons and of Pyramid, No.
1, of the Ancient Egyptian Order of Scots, under whose auspices the funeral will be conducted. The services will be held at Odd Fellows Hall, Seventh and Market streets, San Francisco, tomorrow afternoon, at 2 o'clock incineration will take place at Cypress Lawn. The deceased is survived by his widow, Louise N. Hitchfield, and one daughter.

The large general cargo, brought to this port from the coast in the Matson Navigation steamer Lurline is being rapidly discharged and that vessel is scheduled to depart for Kahului tomorrow evening.
